

Sonora

To see the nakedness of your eyes again gray as the ocean blue as translucent waves catching the sun, to feel your hands' frankness quiet as the silhouettes of birds when I woke that time in your country flying above the palms out of the pastel dawn into the still gray west knowing how little we can't say without words